Visual Story for Disney's Frozen

Today you are going to see Disney's Frozen the musical at the McPherson playhouse.

It is a big theatre.

There will be singing and dancing on a big stage.

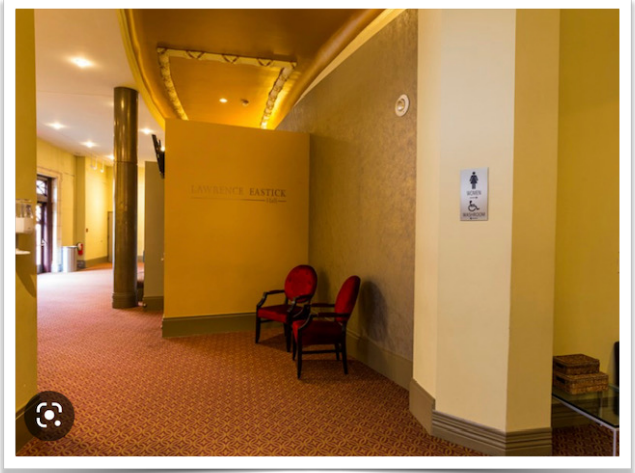

You will walk in the big glass doors.

When you get inside, there will be a person dressed in black to take your ticket. They will scan your ticket and it will make a beep sound.

To the left, you will go to the theatre where there is a big stage.

To the right, there will be a place where they sell drinks and snacks.

There are 3 washrooms, down the hall by the place where they sell drinks, or down a long hallway before you get into the theatre. There is a bathroom for people who use a wheelchair. It is right outside the theatre. There will be quiet spaces you can go when you need it.

This is what you will see when you sit in your seat.

The red curtain will be down when you sit in your seat.

You will hear piano music and then all of the singers and dancers will come on to the stage.

The lights will stay on in the theatre for the whole show so you can see and won't be in the dark.

Things you will see and hear throughout the show: Bright colours and lights, pretend animals as puppets (Olaf and Sven), fog, pretend riffles.

Summary of the show: The story revolves around two sisters from the kingdom of Arendelle: the eldest, and heir to the throne, Elsa, and her dear sister Anna. Upon her coronation, Elsa's secret power is exposed as she unwittingly covers Arendelle in ice. Anna, who falls for Prince Hans at first sight, sets out on a quest to find her sister, teaming up with charming Kristoff and his reindeer Sven. Thinking that an act of true love will save Anna and Elsa, this modern fairy tale proves that you don't need a prince's kiss to solve the problems of a princess.
